Taking Rights Seriously

By Judge Andrew Napolitano

The world is filled with self-evident truths — truisms — that philosophers, lawyers and judges know need not be proven. The sun rises in the east and sets in the west. Two plus two equals four. The shortest distance between two points is a straight line.

These examples, of which there are many, are not true because we believe they're true. They are intrinsically true. Thus, they are true whether we accept their truthfulness or not. Of course, recognizing a universal truth acknowledges the existence of an order of things higher than government and discoverable by the exercise of reason.

The generation of Americans that fought the war of secession against England — according to Professor Murray Rothbard, the last moral war Americans waged — understood the existence of truisms and recognized their origin in nature.

The most famous of these recognitions were

Thomas Jefferson's opening two sentences in the Declaration of Independence that self-evident truths come not from persons but from "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God." Thus, "All Men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness" is a truism. Jefferson could have appealed to the laws of Parliament, as he had done in previous writings. Instead, he appealed to the laws of nature and nature's creator.

Jefferson's neighbor and colleague, James Madison, understood this as well when he wrote the Bill of Rights so as to reflect that human rights do not come from the government. They come from our individual humanity. The Bill of Rights does not grant rights; it restrains the government from interfering with them.

Where do rights come from?

Your right life, to think as you wish, to say what

FROM THE EDITOR

When I was young, I used to believe the saying, “All problems are just communication problems.” I believed that if we could each simply understand the other person’s perspective, we could find common ground.

This makes sense in a way, because everyone I surround myself with is a good person. More than this, my travels have allowed me to see that the vast majority of people across the globe are good people. When we’re dealing with good people, many (but not all) problems are simply communication problems.

This is the “lens” through which most people see the world: good people think that everyone else thinks like them. So if we just communicate better, couldn’t we come together in peace and harmony?

But then I realized that some people are not good people. They may seem like good people. They may be intelligent and charming. But at their core, they are not good people. They don’t think like us. They don’t care like we do.

About 1% of the population are psychopaths, and 3% are sociopaths.

These are very dangerous people.

Psychopaths don’t feel emotions like other people. They completely lack empathy, remorse, guilt and shame. They can be extremely manipulative. They’re often highly skilled at ‘reading people’ and sizing them up quickly. They can identify a person’s likes and dislikes, motives, needs, weak spots, and vulnerabilities.

Psychopaths are power seekers. They have a complete lack of regard for the rights and feelings of others and they don’t have loyalty to any group or nation.

While many are locked up in prison or causing chaos in the streets, others are highly intelligent, functioning members of society. Some exist at the highest levels of government and corporate leadership.

Psychopaths can be extremely adept at pretending to be regular, caring people, which makes them perfect politicians. Dr. Kevin Dutton, author of the book, The Wisdom of Psychopaths, writes, “Psychopaths are fearless, confident, charismatic, ruthless and focused—qualities tailor-made for success in twenty-first-century society.”

While only 1% of the general population are psychopaths, there are certain professions that are especially attractive to psychopaths. Frank Herbert, the author of Dune, succinctly states, “All governments suffer a recurring problem: Power attracts pathological personalities. It is not that power corrupts but that it is magnetic to the corruptible.”

Psychopaths desire personal power and will do anything to get it. As a result, a higher percentage of psychopaths can be found in high-profile positions such as politics, corporate leadership, big banks, show business, and high-profile media roles, compared to other occupations.

It would be wrong to assume that psychopaths think like you and I do. They don’t. They’re completely selfish, and will hurt anyone in order to get what they want, and they will have no remorse in doing so.

This is why the saying, “all problems are just communication problems,” is fundamentally wrong. Psychopaths will do anything to gain more power. They literally don’t care about me, or you, or the country, or the Constitution. They will tear it all down if it gives them more power.

When you look at many government actions through this lens, current events make more sense.

In many cities across the US, lawmakers and prosecutors have implemented policies of not prosecuting criminals. Even violent criminals are often released with no charges. Politicians invite invite hordes of illegal aliens to rush across the border to overload our systems, while at the same time, they defund the police and try to take good people’s guns away.

Is this just extreme naïveté on their part, or is this a psychopathic plan to destroy our country, our values, and our way of life?

It’s not naïveté. These dangerous psychopaths are determined to destroy the United States economically, culturally, morally, spiritually—in every possible way.

But why?

Because the idea of individual liberty is a uniquely Western ideal, and no country embraces this ideal more than the USA. Thus, no nation poses a greater challenge to the psychopaths' insatiable craving for ultimate power and absolute control than the United States of America.

Americans (at least those in the “red states”) think differently from average citizens almost everywhere else in the world. We are skeptical by nature. We fundamentally don't trust the government. We value liberty, truth, critical thinking, mental and bodily sovereignty, and freedom of speech. More than this, we are the only people on earth who believe that our rights come from God, not from the State, which means that the government does not have the authority to take our rights away.

Yes, there are people around the world who believe these things. But there is no country that has these values woven into their DNA like the USA. Most other countries are like the “blue states” in the US—which means they don't guard against tyranny. On the contrary, they sometimes invite it.

For example, even now, after the COVID “pandemic” lies have been exposed, the people of Germany still don't question their government. Nor do New Zealanders, or Australians. Canadians don't believe that their rights come from God, thus they accept whatever rights the government grants them.

Our Constitution, combined with our values of individual freedom and skepticism, and most importantly, our belief that our rights come from God, ARE UNSTOPPABLE VALUES. The globalists simply can't implement their one-world government with the USA in the way.

This is why the globalists want to destroy the USA.

Many politicians, corporate leaders and media stars in the USA are absolutely selfish, destructive psychopaths who are willing to bring this country to its knees in order to advance digital IDs, a social credit system, a programmable digital currency controlled by the central banks, and a slavery system for the human race.

Despite their plans for taking over the planet, I am ultimately optimistic. For, even though 4% of society are sociopaths and psychopaths, most humans are very good people.

We, the good people, have created everything good in society, and we have done so in spite of these blood sucking parasites. We are the reason for the USA's success and prosperity. We are the reason that this nation is, for the most part, free, happy and prosperous.

Government leaders, the central bankers and the media had nothing to do with America's freedom or happiness or prosperity. They have done nothing except hold us back.

They are trying to take us down with their sinking ship. And yes, they will certainly take some of us down with them.

But I believe we are witnessing the death of the systems these evil people have put in place. I believe that we will prevail—that freedom will prevail.

We are a strong, moral, and courageous people.

We defend innocents. We defend the vulnerable. We defend individual freedoms, justice, peace, and prosperity.

We work together, voluntarily, not under duress, to strengthen our ties to one another and to improve society as a whole.

We value free speech and truth.

We provide the conditions for boys to grow into strong family men and for girls to grow into loving mothers.

We are all the better for freely choosing to love God, to live a decent, moral life, and to respect our neighbor.

So, I urge you . . .

Change the lens through which you view the world. Be highly skeptical of people in power, even the people on “your side of the aisle”. Not only does power corrupt, but it attracts the corrupt.

See psychopaths for what they are: very dangerous people. Do NOT trust them.

Don't watch the rotten mainstream news or entertainment media.

At the same time, see the good in your neighbor, whose occasional disagreements with you are often just a simple communication problem.

Stand up for freedom. Remind politicians that they are our servants, not our masters. Cherish and defend our Constitution, because it can protect us only if we protect it.

Most importantly, remember that our rights come from God, not from the government, which means that no one has the authority to take our rights away.

you think, to publish what you say, to worship or not, to associate or not, to shake your fist in the tyrant's face by telling the government what you think, your right to defend yourself using and carrying the same weapons as the government does, your right to be left alone, to own property, to travel or to stay put — these intrinsic aspects of human existence are natural rights that come from our humanity and for the exercise of which all rational persons yearn.

This is the natural rights understanding of Jefferson's Declaration and Madison's Bill of Rights, to the latter of which all in American government have sworn allegiance and deference.

A right is not a privilege. A right is an indefeasible and permanent personal claim against the whole world. It does not require a government permission slip. It does not require preconditions except the ability to reason. It does not require the approval of family or neighbors.

A privilege is something the government doles out to suit itself or calm the masses. The government gives those who meet its qualifications the privilege to vote so it can claim a form of Jeffersonian legitimacy. Jefferson argued in the Declaration that no government is morally licit without the consent of the governed.

No one alive today ratified the creation of the federal government, but most accept it. Is acceptance consent? Of course not — no more than walking on a government sidewalk is consent to government's lies, theft and killing. Surely, the Germans who voted against the Nazis, and could not escape their filthy grasp, hardly consented to that horrible form of government.

Are our rights equal to each other? Some are equal to each other, but one is greater than all, as none of the rights catalogued briefly above can be exercised without the right to live. This is the right most challenging to governments that have enslaved masses and gloried in fighting morally illicit wars that kill and thus destroy the right to live.

But if a right is a claim against the whole world, how can a government — whether popular or totalitarian or both — extinguish it by death or slavery? The short answer is that no governments, notwithstanding the public oaths their officials take upon assuming office, accept the natural origins of rights. To government, rights are privileges.

Stated differently, governments do not take rights seriously.

Governments hate and fear the exercise of natural rights. Ludwig von Mises properly called government “the negation of liberty.” Freedom is the default position. We are literally born free, naturally free.

Government is an artificial creation based on a monopoly of force in a geographical area that could not exist if it did not negate our freedoms. Government denies our rights by punishing the exercise of them and by stealing property from us.

Rights are not just claims against the government. They are claims against the whole world. This was best encapsulated by Rothbard's non-aggression principle, which teaches that initiating all real and threatened aggression — whether by violence, coercion or deception — is morally illicit. That applies to your neighbors as well as to the police.

Of course, in Rothbard's world, there would be no government police unless all persons consented; and he wouldn't have. A private police entity — paid to protect life, liberty and property — would be far more efficient and faithful to its job, which it would lose if it failed, than the government's police, which thrives on assaulting life, liberty and property; and keeping their jobs.

The exercise of rights requires abandonment of fear, acceptance of truth, and rejection of compromise with government. As Ayn Rand famously observed, any compromise between good and evil, natural rights and slavery, food and poison, results in death – death of the body, death of liberty, death of both.

How to Stop Your Phone from Spying on You.

Admit it, you take your smartphone with you everywhere.

It sits on your nightstand while you talk in your sleep. It accompanies you to work, to school, to the grocery store, and to the gas station. It's a third wheel on intimate dinner dates with your spouse and at important business lunches with your clients. It probably even entertains you while you do your business in the bathroom.

You chat with your friends on your smartphone more than you do in person. You text your doctor questions from your phone more often than you visit his office.

Not only that . . . but your smartphone is in your pocket when you confide your innermost secrets to your pastor or your therapist.

It sees what apps you use and what websites you visit. It knows what you spend your money on, and what games you like to play.

You and your smartphone are joined at the hip.

So, it's a good thing you don't live in a world in which your phone has been turned into a surveillance device, isn't it?!

Isn't it wonderful that we can trust powerful corporations, such as Google, to do the right thing, to respect our privacy, to put safeguards in place that keep the knowledge that they gain about us to themselves and to not use our own information against us and our children?

Aren't we lucky that we can trust our government to respect our God-given rights, and that our intelligence agencies, the FBI, the NSA and our judicial system respect not only our individual liberties, but the limits placed on them by our wonderful Constitution?

Well, maybe we aren't that lucky.

Your smartphone does spy on you. It betrays you. It tattles on you. It allows people the world over to peer into your private life. It allows governments to illegally track you and monitor you, and they use your information against you.

As the saying goes, information is power. And when they have information ABOUT you, they have power OVER you.

Maybe you've seen an ad pop up on your mobile phone for a cruise to the Italian Riviera right after telling a friend that you want to see Italy someday.

Or perhaps you've seen an ad for dog toys appear on your phone immediately after gushing over your cousin's adorable puppy. At the time, we thought the coincidences were eerie. Now we can account for them.

We all remember when, 12 years ago, Edward Snowden revealed that NSA spy programs could turn on our phone's microphone or camera under any pretext. That revelation alone confirmed that our iPhones and Androids are high-tech versions of Benedict Arnold. They betray us behind our backs.

Knowing that our phones are purposely made to be trojan horses that spy on us, can we do anything to protect ourselves from their treachery?

Yes. But before I explain, let me share some shocking statistics. Around the world, 4.8 billion people use smartphones. More than 98% of these smartphones use one of two operating systems—either iPhone, which is produced by Apple, or Android, which is controlled by Google.

In other words, if a government wants to spy on its own citizens, it needs to compromise only those two companies.

Google has developed a reputation for questionable ethics, which at one time were supposedly embodied in the slogan "Do no evil." These days, though, Google is at the very heart of many evils that are being perpetrated across the planet.

But Apple can't be trusted either. Although it convincingly plays the role of the good guy, Apple showed its true colors on November 9, 2022.

That's when Apple removed the "AirDrop" feature from devices in Hong Kong and China. The Airdrop feature allowed people to communicate via direct connections between phones, thus bypassing China's stringent control of the internet.

But on November 9 two years ago, Apple released an update to its operating system. Rather than listing the changes, as it often does, the company simply said, "This update includes bug fixes and security updates and is recommended for all users." But hidden in this update was a change that only applied to iPhones sold in China and Hong Kong.

In other words, Apple betrayed its customers by submitting to an inhumane and autocratic dictate from the Chinese government. Don't think that Apple won't do the same in collusion with the US government.

So, let's get back to the question, "What can you do to protect yourself from your snooping phone?"

The answer: Use a de-Googled Android OS on your phone.

Unlike the iPhone, the Android operating system is open source. This means we can see what is going on in the operating system and, better yet, we can modify it to ensure that everything in it that communicates with Google is stripped out.

There are many different de-Googled operating systems, including Calyx, Murena, and eFoundation. The best, and the one that I use, is called Graphene OS.

Not only does Graphene OS strip Google out of the equation, it adds many additional privacy and security features. After investigating them all, I believe Graphene OS is the most private and secure phone operating system on the market.

If you are familiar with Android phones now, switching to Graphene OS will be a breeze. If you are used to iPhones, it will take a little bit of adjustment.

There are two ways to get the Graphene OS. First, you can purchase a phone with Graphene OS preinstalled (click here) or, second, you can install Graphene OS on your own phone yourself—assuming you have a compatible phone. Click here to learn how to install Graphene OS yourself (use this option only if you are technically inclined).

Water that is free from toxins is fundamental to good health.

Our society uses over 100,000 chemicals. Today, toxins contaminate every aspect of our environment.

"But," you may say, "my local government assures me that our water is safe."

Your tap water may be legally "safe" to drink, but it still could contain harmful chemicals.

How can this be? Simple. The government uses the legal definition of the term "safe" drinking water, not the English language definition. Many toxins aren't regulated.

Distillation duplicates nature's water cycle to produce consistently pure water for decades. It's the single best method for removing contaminants from water.

Drink (and cook with) fresh, great-tasting, pure water for the rest of your life!

- ✓ Distilled water is recommended by top nutritionists, including Dr. Andrew Weil.
- ✓ Made in the USA for 55 years.
- ✓ Stainless steel construction.
- ✓ The highest quality drinking water system on the market today.
- ✓ Reasonably priced.
